- Unregulability of cyberspace interferes with the ability of commerce to flourish. Explain how?

The internet is a goldmine for scammers, con artist and pyramid schemes, truly, the number of illegitimate practices on the internet is uncountable. This is a huge hindrance to e-commerce which relies on the authenticity of the website. Since it's incredibly hard to determine the authenticity of any given e-commerce, all e-commerce sites suffer because of that.

- And how can cyberspace regulability be increased?

This problem can be tackled in a number of ways. Firstly, the most obvious is government wise surveillance, this can be done by hiring people specifically to determine the authenticity of e-commerce. As an example Saudi Arabia has its Ma'rouf mark of authenticity.

Also, we can tackle it from the commerce side. There can be companies or people whose whole job is to determine, or review all e-commerce in some sites. This is incredibly useful for buyers, personally I usually try and search for reviews of products & sites before buying into anything. The integrity of the reviewer is much higher than that of any random site that I happened to stumble upon. Also some sites include a Review Section, which acts in the same manner as professional reviewers, although its integrity is a little debated
